

GOLDENEYE

Oracabessa Bay, GoldenEye has been a haven for jet setting A-listers since its dawning. Built by Ian Fleming, James Bond's creator, as his Jamaican retreat, the hotel is now owned by rock and roll hall of famer Chris Blackwell, the music producer who introduced the world to Bob Marley and U2. The recently renovated hotel offers an authentic Jamaican experience in a luxurious setting. Sited on 52 stunning acres, the hotel is home to secret coves, breathtaking private beaches, tropical forests and an invitingly tranquil lagoon.

The true experience and luxury of GoldenEye comes from the attention to details. The suites, villas and cottages, including Fleming's original villa, scattered along the lagoon, private beach and amidst the tropical forests, seduce guests with contemporary, island and beach inspired décor. Each features exquisite amenities, private outdoor showers and verandahs to enjoy gentle Caribbean breezes.

Dining is a sumptuous affair at GoldenEye's two restaurants, serving Jamaican cuisine with an international flair. The FieldSpa, on the lagoon's edge, rejuvenates with treatments using locally grown ingredients and relaxes with serene views. Guests can also choose to enjoy in-room spa service.
